During 1993 and 1994, all of the activities of the Open Society Fund - Bosnia and Herzegovina (OSF-BH) could be considered humanitarian aid of one sort or another - assistance designed to help people survive the war. In 1995 these efforts received less of our attention, and the foundation began to develop long-term programs in education, culture, independent media, and other fields. By the end of the year, the humanitarian and programs were discontinued entirely. We hope we will never again have a need for such programs.

The most important undertaking during 1995 was the establishment of special-purpose institution which conceive, implement, and coordinate a number of programs and projects in their specific fields. These include the Center for Management and Information Technology, the Media Center, and the Legal Center. The common objective of all of these centers is education and training aimed at developing relevant research and analysis and bringing Bosnia up to international professional standards.

The foundation's activities in 1995 were still limited only to the parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina accessible to make a considerable step forward in supporting projects outside of Sarajevo, as the OSF-BH did in the Zenica, Tuzla, and Mostar regions.

Also, during the severest blockade of Bihać, the foundation managed to deliver considerable quantities of food into the region, easing suffering there.

The war in Bosnia and Herzegovina has stopped, and we expect that 1996 will bring further positive changes. There is fundamental need for a deep transformation of economic consciousness in our country. To help bring Bosnia into the mainstream of modern economics, we started the Management and Information Technology Center to education economists.

Covering Sensitive Issues in Free Bosnia

The Media Center was established to increase professionalism among journalists and to raise local standards to those of contemporary media in other countries. One of the center's major undertakings was the revitalisation of the periodical Slobodna Bosna (Free Bosnia), which covers even the most sensitive social and political issues. By establishing in Law Center - which collects and disseminates information on law and the legal profession - the foundation is helping to prepare lawyers for the new roles they will play in both the public and private sectors during the country's transition to democracy.

The foundation continued to support education at the university level as well as the elementary and high school levels. In 1995, the Soros School of English was established while the previously instituted. Computer School extended the scope of its work. In the field of culture, we supported a special project entitled "A Month of BH Culture in the Czech Republic" and the Sarajevo Film Festival, as well as activities to improve the quality of teaching at art academies.

In 1995, we discovered that the many projects we implemented during the war had provided valuable lessons for peacetime. At the time of their creation, many of our programs represented efforts to maintain at least some semblance of civilised life in the face of the apocalyptic impact of war. These "pilot projects" demonstrated that we could make significant accomplishments in adverse circumstances, and encouraged us to continue our activities as conditions grew more favourable. Due to its success in implementing programs, the foundation has developed a solid reputation among the general public as well as among representatives of governmental and nongovernmental organisation.

We are aware, of course, that peace brings its own problems. In that respect, in 1996 the foundation plans to initiate programs for the social groups that were particularly threatened and deprived by the war.

The foundation's presence in the parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina this far inaccessible will certainly require new approaches. The time has come to start some serious thinking about these matters.

In the Dayton accord brings real peace and the beginning of a era for Bosnia and Herzegovina, then we can state with confidence that the OSF-BH is ready - with regard to its experience, personnel, reputation, and the results achieved so far - for new, positive developments, for the process of reintegration of this country into the regional and international communities.

Support to New and Urgent Needs

The education system in Bosnia-Hercegovina in 1995 was shattered and still in need of emergency relief and recovery which marked the immediate post-war period. Most natural science laboratories and facilities were destroyed or looted, libraries have been devastated and there was no possibility for research since the academic community was still isolated from the outside world. The fact that the country housed three different curricula and different textbooks in every entity contributed to a disquieting environment. 1995 was also marked by increased involvement of foreign agencies in physical reconstruction of schools.

Recognising the fact that our failure to support higher education would seriously handicap prospects for future economic recovery of the country, we continued to provide stipends for university level students, using academic achievement as the only selection criteria. Through OSI New York we paid scholarship fees for 76 Bosnian students studying in Croatia. Support for research through HESP was not only a way for the academics to survive with the fees we provided, it also instilled life into the research community and produced competent research work. Support for MA and PhD candidates also helped to preserve innovative study.

In addition to establishing the email system ZAMIR (for peace), which connected B&H to the outside world and which has been a huge success with over 2000 registered users, we started a project of providing full Internet connectivity for the academic community and institutions. This project was seen as the easiest way for collecting and disseminating information and thereby strengthening the notion of open society. By the end of the year we provided and installed the communication equipment needed to build an Internet service provider. We also completed a walk-in center with terminals for users who would not otherwise have access. Unfortunately, the satellite link was not installed in December and the project was not completed as planned in 1995.

Five computer schools around Bosnia-Hercegovina operated throughout 1995 preparing primary and secondary school students for challenges of the modern age. Training in Informatics and English language was considered as a valuable expansion of existing curricula. Extracurricular activities, supported through the regional Youth program, provided thousands of students with a variety of pastimes.

Finally, a huge portion of our budget was left open to cover new and urgent needs in education and science. Thanks to readily available funds we were able to react quickly and finance the printing of textbooks and support different education institutions.

Primary & Secondary Education Program Committee

Prof. Aida Arnautović

Prof. Vesna Alić

Prof. Darija Burić

The Primary & Secondary Education Program was started in April 1995 as a continuation of OSCS-Sarajevo Education Project and was designed to improve conditions in primary and secondary education seriously deteriorated by the war.

Initiatives were taken in several areas, from printing of curricula and teaching materials, emergency repairs of so called "war schools", to a mine-awareness campaign for teenagers and support to youth clubs. OSF also donated equipment and office materials to schools and institutions. Co-operation with schools, Pedagogic Institutes and the Ministry of Education was satisfactory and stimulating.

Important directions taken by the program included the expansion of activities to other areas of Bosnia-Hercegovina and the completion of an updated assessment of the situation in education (used by World Bank for preparation of their 1996 program).

Higher Education Programs

Members of the National OSF B&H HESP Commission in 1995 were:

Doc. dr. Edin Muminović,

Prof. dr. Hidajet Repovac,

Prof. Mirjana Mavrak,

OSF B&H National HESP Committee took a new course in 1995 leaving the so called "humanitarian period" behind. The most important task in 1995 was to make changes in teaching process by introducing new subjects and new methods, as well as curricula reform.

Priority was given to bringing in visiting lecturers to teach subjects that lacked local professorship and sending national scholars abroad so that they would become acquainted with new trends and developments in their fields after being isolated for more than three years. In this regard we also assisted the academic community by purchasing books, textbooks, scientific journals and magazines, by donating technical equipment (PC's, Xerox machines), and by supporting the printing of textbooks and books in Sarajevo and other university cities. We also assisted in the organisation of seminars, workshops and round table discussions at home and encouraged our scholars to attend similar gatherings abroad.

REGIONAL PROGRAMS

Research Support Scheme

The Scheme, supporting individual and group research, was deemed successful since more than 160 research reports, surveys, monographs, books and articles from all fields were produced.

UK Scholarships

Oxford Hospitality Scheme involves a one-month study visit for university professors. They are given opportunity to meet their colleagues, to check the latest books, textbooks and journals from their relative fields and to improve their English. In 1995 we sent 5 university professors to use the facilities of Oxford Colleges.

CEU (Central European University)

A whole range of courses is offered to graduate students at our CEU Colleges in Budapest and Warsaw. In 1995, four Bosnian students were accepted at CEU Budapest.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE PROGRAM

It was the priority in English Language Program in 1995 to establish English Language Schools in all major cities in Bosnia & Herzegovina. Those schools were to follow the criteria and cirrocumulus of similar institutions in the world and to develop into Foreign Languages Centres in future period.
In 1995 OSF B&H established 6 schools of English language: three of them in Sarajevo, and one in Zenica, Mostar and Tuzla.
Business English courses were also started-up in Soros Management and Information Technology Centre and courses in English language for journalists in Soros Media Centre.
The total number of students in 1995 was 790, and number of engaged teachers was 12.
The schools used the textbooks of Oxford University Press "English in Perspective I and II" given us the donation from the British Publishing House.
The program goals are of long-term nature, education being very often long and continuos process that has to have the time distance in order to perceive it's full impacts.

HUMANITARIAN AID 95

COMMITTEE ON HUMANITARIAN AID:

Mr. Franjo Topić
Mr. Ismet Cerić
Mr. Jakob Finci

In 1995 the Humanitarian program still functioned under war circumstances but to a lesser degree than in previous years. This was mainly due to improved living conditions in B&H. Nevertheless, OSF continued its engagement in this field in the following areas:

Medecine and Health, which was strictly devoted to cover urgent and daily needs of medical institutions.

Infrastructure and Utilities, which included essential support for improving living conditions, rehabilitation 38 elevators in high-rise buildings, aid for the cleaning of the city and improvement of electrical power supply.

Local production, which included active support to local companies, creating the new jobs, participating in other programs (education, medical, refugees relief ...) through projects such as, seeds program, herb collection and considerable assistance to refugees from Srebrenica .

Food and Nutrition, which included a projects to provide basic food for people in need either alone or together with other NGOs (Feed the Children).

Renewal and Rebuilding, primarily devoted to the rebuilding of schools, refugee villages and orphanage.

Logistics, included general support for various institutions enabling them to raise their operational standards.

There was no discriminations in distribution of funds or in-kind donations. In-kind donations were mainly the extension of projects that were begun in 1994.

The overall program structure followed the Board of trustees' decisions concerning priority areas of assistance. The regional implementation throughout of B&H was relatively good, 30% of all projects took place outside of Sarajevo (Bihaæ, Mostar, Tuzla, Zenica).

LAW PROGRAM
In January 1995, Open Society Fund Bosnia and Herzegovina introduced Law Program with long-term goals to place the law profession at proper level it normally has in democratic societies. Law program strategy in the first year of existing was to encourage work on law education and transformation of legal system. In horrible war conditions that was really a hard task. That was the reason why Open Society Fund B&H started with special project: Law Center which would take an active role to animate the lawyers to participate in building of open society based on law justice.

MEDIA

Established at the very beginning of the OSF's activity in Bosnia and Hercegovina, the Media Program went through all the characteristic periods of the Foundation's history. Basically,the Foundation's program supports and develops independent media in B&H; since it sees them as one of the indispensable preconditions for the existence of an open society. Simply put, without a free press there can be no Democracy.

1995 was a kind of a turning point : after a period marked by a rather broad scope (our motto at the time was "keep Bosnian media alive"), OSF BH sharpened the Media Program's criteria. This narrowed the circle of individuals and media who received the Foundation's support. OSF became more selective, judging applicants on their adherence to the principles of freedom and independence. The very mission of the Foundation came into forefront.

In addition to technical and material assistance, priority was given to the urgent need to improve the professionalization of local journalism. This was the main reason for establishing the Soros Media Centre at the beginning of 1995. It is the focal point of our education and training activities in the Media Program.

Launching the magazine"Slobodna Bosna" was not only OSF's major project but has proved so far to be the major media project in the country in general. The magazine started in September 1995 and within three months reached a circulation of 30.000 copies - something that was really beyond any expectations.

In 1995 OSF ordered a survey (through the "Mediaplan" organisation) which established the first systematic picture of the media scene in BiH (at least on the territory we could reach at the time).

Without the Foundation's engagement, the media scene in Bosnia and Hercegovina certainly would seem different.

PUBLISHING PROGRAM

Publishing Board members:

Hanifa Kapidžić-Osmanagić

Tvrtko Kulenović
Zlatko Topčić.

The goal of Publishing Program in 1996 was to provide the substantial help in the book chain - from author, publishing and printing house to the reader audience.
The support was through printing of textbooks, specialised literature and periodicals, putting the higher qualitative criteria in literature production, through support to publishing, as well as to Cultural Magazines.

At the beginning of year OSF B&H announced an open competition for publishing houses in several editions: The first authors' book, Bosnian traditional and modern literature, World literature, Edition of Bosnian and world essays, Literature for youth and children and Titles from humanities and hard sciences.
36 books from all editions were supported and among them were publishing houses with the long tradition as well as publishing houses established during the war.
In the second part of year OSF B&H announced another open competition - this one was addressed to authors. It was supposed to deliver Soros annual award for the best novel, book of stories and book of essays. The goal of this competition was to motivate writers, affirmed but young, to continue with their work . OSF B&H took the obligation to support the publishing of awarded books.

Cultural Magazines

At the beginning of year OSF B&H supported nearly all cultural magazines published in Bosnia & Herzegovina. They were: Zidne novine, Odjek, Fantom slobode, Slovo, Zora Cankarjeva, Dijalog, Časopis 99 and Sineast. However, some of them did not fulfilled the high professional standards due to the fact that many editors left the country.
That is why OSF B&H initiated the revival of the literature magazine "Život" that had had the long tradition and which ceased to exist at the beginning of war.

In 1995 over a hundred projects were supported in the field of visual and performing arts, rock music, cultural manifestations, cultural heritage and multimedia projects. Computer and other equipment was purchased and given to institutions to improve their work. Itemised it looks like this:

- Visual Arts - 43 donations;
- Performing Arts - 27 donations;
- Cultural Manifestations - 5 donations;
- Multimedia Projects - 2 donations;
- Support for Academies - eight education institutions were supported:
  Academy of Fine Arts;
  Academy of Performing Arts;
  Music Academy;
  Music High School in Sarajevo;
  Music High School in Tuzla;
  Music High School in Zenica;
  Music High School in Mostar;
  High School for Applied Arts
- Other - 13 donations.

Through the regional program, Open Society Cultural Link, the visit of Slovenian art movement NSK was supported. The project was done in co-operation with OSI Slovenia.
In 1995 the program continued its affirmation of B&H culture abroad. Another priority was informing cultural workers about art trends abroad. The need to establish a puppetry workshop for education of young puppeteers also emerged.

After only a glance at the list of donations and grantees, it could be said that one of the goals for 1995 has been reached - diversity of art expressions and representation of all parts of B&H.
Grantees were individuals, groups and institutions from Sarajevo, Mostar, Zenica, Tuzla and Travnik, informal groups, amateurs, smaller institutions of local importance, as well as institutions of state, even international significance and long tradition.
Projects from all fields of arts were supported with the exception of comics. Not only events were supported, but also requests for purchasing materials and repairing of instruments and through this direct assistance to creative work.
Audiences included small children, pupils and students of high schools as well as audiences in theatres, concert and exhibition halls.
Equipment has been provided in different cases.
Grantees were institutions that in previous period distinguished themselves through their work or were in a specific situation, either because they were new or they had to start almost from the beginning for different reasons.
A certain number of books were purchased and put into the Soros Media Centre library as well as subscriptions for over 38 magazines in the fields of visual arts, architecture, film and theatre.
Special attention was placed on the education of the young. In addition to donations for academies and art high schools in Sarajevo, Tuzla, Mostar, and Zenica, several projects of educational character were supported.
Two manifestations, supported by OSF B&H, attracted large audiences. They were "Month of B&H in the Czech Republic" organised by the Foundation "People in Need" and "First Summer Film Festival Sarajevo", organised by Obala Arts Centre.
